

There Was No One There

You thought you were there.

Watching.

Noticing.

Experiencing.

But nothing needed you.

Nothing was waiting to be seen.

Nothing depended on a witness.

The moment appeared to include you—

but it didn't require that.

There was no one there.
It only seemed that way.

